

Keep an eye on your home and family with a video doorbell

Whether you're at work, running errands, or just in another room, a video doorbell can be a valuable tool to help you keep an eye on your family and home. Originally designed for security, doorbell cameras are now key to staying connected to your loved ones. Here's how a Heartland Security video doorbell can help provide peace of mind:

Get real-time notifications

Receive instant alerts on your phone whenever someone arrives at your door. You'll know exactly when your child or other family members arrive home, even if you can't be there to greet them in person.

Stay connected with two-way communication

Heartland Security video doorbells come with two-way audio so you can see and speak to anyone at your door. Greet your family members, remind your kids to lock the door, or communicate with unexpected visitors.

Monitor visitors

Kids may bring friends over, neighbors could stop by, or delivery drivers might come by the house. A doorbell camera lets you see who's approaching, helping you guide your family on how to handle any visitors.

Review video for added security

If you're ever curious about what happened at home while you were away, video doorbells offer video playback. Whether it's to catch up on a missed visitor or check for unexpected deliveries, HD video gives you a clear view of the day or evening's events.

Establish daily routines

Use the camera to establish a consistent check-in routine. Encourage family members to give you a quick "hello" when they arrive, helping everyone stay connected and fostering a sense of responsibility.

Smart home integration

Doorbell cameras can often integrate with other smart home systems, such as smart locks and lighting. You can automate routines like unlocking the door or turning on the porch light as family members approach, making their return even smoother.
